Those Mail Boxes.

To the Editor of the Gazette:
I notice in this morning's GAZETTE that we are to have the new mail boxes when the city council shall "intimate that no objections will be offered to their being on the streets."

The city council is not perfect and no doubt often makes mistakes, but it has never done such a small and foolish act as to object to mail boxes being placed on the streets.

At the corner of Third and Main streets is a rather narrow passageway between two posts. On one of these posts the postal department was placing a large box to receive papers on the Main street or west side of the post, thus obstructing a main thoroughfare. Assistant City Attorney Jackson saw the work being done and requested the superintendent to place the box on the east side of the post, which would be just as convenient and in no one's way. This modest request was answered by saying he (the superintendent) would place the box where he pleased. Then Mr. Jackson threatened him with the enforcement of a city ordinance which says that the sidewalks shall not be obstructed with any substance whatever.

The superintendent picked up his box and there the matter ended. Of course the people of the city realize the convenience these boxes would be, and some of us are surprised that Mrs. Burdill will tolerate such a small piece of official arrogance in one of her subordinates. It is further believed that if she will personally inspect the location of the box at the corner referred to she will agree that Mr. Jackson's request ought to have been granted and those "pretty red boxes" placed "where they would do the most good."

LOCALITIES.

There were several additions to the Christian church yesterday, and baptismal service again at night.

Dr. Wm. Hall, editor of the International, of New York, will lecture in the Christian church to-night. He is said to be one of the most eloquent lecturers on the American platform.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Brooks will take place this afternoon from her late residence, corner Dargatz and Galveston avenues. The services will occur at the Catholic church at 4 p. m.

Last evening for a brief space of time a new and strange comet appeared in the western sky about forty-five minutes above the horizon. It was seen about seven o'clock for some fifteen minutes, when clouds intervened and cut off the unusual sight.

The only error made on the Democratic ticket sent out on Tuesday in the name of M. R. Collins of Arlington, candidate for commissioner of precinct No. 2. It is printed W. R. Collins. The error is slight.

A Financial Spirit.—Maude: "Have you heard that Miss Hockheimer is engaged? She's so rich I shouldn't think she'd marry." Blimber: "She probably wants to husband her resources."

THE JIG UP.

Ex-Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson's Views on the Election.

His Only Consolation is Defeat Will Help His Party in '92—High Prices Caused By the McKinley Bill.

Special to the Gazette.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—Ex-Postmaster-General Clarkson is disgruntled. He is not at all pleased with Republican prospects. He says the manufacturers have gone back on the party since the passage of the McKinley bill. Gen. Clarkson is a firm believer in the use of boodle in the campaign and makes no bones of saying so. Since the management of the campaign was turned over to Gen. Clarkson he has visited New York and Chicago in the interest of funds, but as he did not get as much as he expected, he came back looking anything but confident. He said to a former leader of the Republican party in the South the other day that the jig was up for the Republicans this fall. He assigns the cause for dissatisfaction to the tariff. He says that prices have been put up on all classes of goods when there was no ground for a rise. The McKinley bill, he said, had not been given a fair trial, and the country would in November revolt against the Republicans. He said, however, that defeat this year would strengthen the party in '92. Gen. Clarkson says that there is very little hope for McKinley, and it will not be much of a surprise if Cannon and Henderson are defeated. Of course Gen. Clarkson doesn't talk in this strain to the reporters, but he admits in private that all indications point to the next house going Democratic. He sticks to it, however, that the McKinley bill is the best piece of tariff legislation ever passed, and that the advance in prices is only temporary. The one long and loud complaint that is heard in every corner of the land is the remarkable advance in prices, caused by the McKinley bill, on every article of wearing apparel. Even the administration is made to feel the difference in cost of goods since the new tariff went into effect. The latest and most prominent persons to protest—silently, of course—against the McKinley bill are Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Dimmick. Whenever Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Dimmick have occasion to go shopping they take the train for Baltimore and make their purchases at the most fashionable establishments in that city. The other day these ladies went to Baltimore to make some purchases, at one of the leading dry goods establishments. Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Dimmick spent a long time looking at the beautiful French gowns and wraps displayed. When Mrs. Harrison began to price some of the dress goods she was astounded to find that the cost of the finest quality had gone up just 30 per cent., and she expressed her astonishment in no uncertain way.

"Why," she said, "three months ago this same class of goods you quoted to me at $2.40, and now you ask $3.20 a yard. Why is it?"

"Why, my dear madam," said the clerk, with a modest look, "it is the McKinley tariff bill. On these goods the duty was formerly 30 per cent.; now it is 107 per cent. On this other material, which I quote to you at $2.80 a yard, the duty was formerly 65 per cent., and we could sell it at $2.25. Now the duty is 85 per cent., and we must make our profits."

Mrs. Harrison looked at Mrs. Dimmick, and Mrs. Dimmick looked at Mrs. Harrison. Neither of the ladies dared do more than exchange glances lest they should reveal their identity. They, however, made a purchase or two, but did not buy as extensively as they had intended. Then they went to the hosiery counter. Mrs. Dimmick wanted some hosiery, for which she had formerly paid, at the same counter, $10 a dozen. She found the price marked up here to $12, and it was then her turn to open her eyes.

She expressed her mind to the salesman in a way that women do sometimes, and was informed by that gentleman, with a bland smile, that it was all the McKinley bill. He said that the duty on that class of goods had formerly been 40 per cent., and that now it was 65 per cent. He remarked further that a cheaper line of goods, which last summer sold for $6 a dozen was now marked at $9 a dozen, and added:

"In fact, ladies, the further we go down the scale in price the greater has been the advance."

Mrs. Dimmick bought a half dozen of the kind of hosiery she wanted, in place of the whole dozen that she had intended buying.

Before leaving Washington Mrs. Dimmick had promised to buy a new dress for her maid. She wanted some sort of woolen stuff, and she went to look at some H-niutta cloth. She expected to pay eighty-five cents a yard, and was dumfounded to find that the price had been increased to $1.10.

The salesman at the counter did not wait to be asked the reason for the rise; he volunteered the information that it was the McKinley bill. "Last summer the duty on that class of goods was 61 per cent., now it is 125 per cent."

Mrs. Dimmick heaved a great sigh, but having promised her maid a new dress she bought it.

When it came to buying pearl buttons for Baby McKee's small clothes Mrs. Harrison got angry.

Last summer she had bought these buttons in the same store for ten cents a card, two dozen on a card; now the salesman unblushingly charged her twenty-five cents a dozen, for the same buttons.

"I suppose," she said, with sarcasm, "that this, too, is the result of the McKinley bill."

"It is," said the salesman, with politeness. "The McKinley bill has put a duty on the goods, my dear madam, of 260 per cent. upon their cost price in Europe. It is a prohibitory duty, and I think" (the salesman did not know of course, whom he was talking to) "it was done to enable that old hypocrite, John Wauwamaker, to carry out a purpose he has had in view of establishing a pearl button manufactory in Philadelphia."

Mrs. Harrison winced, and with a slight and very cold bow, left the counter without buying any pearl buttons. As they left, Mrs. Dimmick remarked facetiously to her sister:

"I am afraid Benny will have to use safety pins hereafter instead of buttons." These are facts that it would do well for the farmers of the country to ponder over.

BASE BALL.

The Game Played Yesterday—Some Fine Work Done by Good Teams—The Attendance.

That was a good game of ball played yesterday afternoon. The attendance was not large, though there were enough out to make the grand stand look like old times. The game was not extensively advertised, which accounts for the meager attendance.

The men played ball. The teams are composed of professionals of high repute, some of whom have passed muster before the most critical grand stands in America. Ramsey's pitching elicited the greatest interest. He is a wonderful player, of which his work yesterday gave evidence.

The game was an exciting one and required eleven innings to complete. The Fort Worths won as the result of Ramsey's pitching.

There will be another game this afternoon at which Ramsey and McGee will be the Fort Worth battery, Huston and Spies for Dallas.

Don't Look for Cheapness

In buying a suit for yourself or your boy; it don't pay. It's much safer and a great deal more satisfying in the long run to pay $15 for a first-class, guaranteed all-wool, can't-be-beat suit of clothes than it is to pay $10 for a mixed-with-cotton, ordinary suit that won't wear half as well nor look good half as long as the other one. This is a hint that's just dropped by the wayside for the benefit of those who need a pointer in buying clothes. These who trade with us will tell you that our values can nowhere be equalled for the same amount of money. If you really need a winter suit or an outfit of warm underwear in which to comfortably pass through the cold months ahead of us you can save time, trouble and money by making out the store to buy from. We can sell you an overcoat for $15 or $20, worth $20 and $25. This is a considerable saving, and if you follow it through our line you can buy your winter outfit at a great saving to yourself.
